The word 'Speedster' has been synonymous with Porsche since the mid 1950's. The original 356 variant was not just aesthetically beautiful but lightweight. The variants that have worn the 'Speedster' badge since have been more about the styling than the performance, until the latest 991, like the model we are offering here.

Carbon fibre wings and bonnet were used from the 911R and the rear apron from the GT3 Touring. Yet perhaps the biggest and best news is the engine, which is a development of the naturally aspirated 4.0-litre flat six that has become a hallmark of the GT3 experience. Fuel injectors operating at higher pressure have helped raise the power from 493bhp to 503bhp. Four-wheel steering has been retuned to compensate for the high-speed stability lost by removing the GT3's enormous rear wing, but overall the mechanical package is practically identical. To underscore Porsche's intent, all 991 Speedsters are six-speed manual!
