The F512M is the ultimate and final evolution of the Testarossa. Updates from the previous model included fixed headlights rather than the older retractable style. The front bumper and grille were restyled to bear a resemblance to the F355 and the 456, with new turn signal indicators and fog lamps. The rear also carried cues from its siblings, and it was fitted with round tail lights, which were similar to those of the F355 and would become a signature Ferrari design for years to come. Inside the F512M received further updates, such as a new, more modern steering wheel, adjustable aluminium pedals, a more refined air-conditioning system and an updated trim. New five-spoke split-rim alloy wheels were fitted to complete the look. The F512Mâ€™s mechanicals also received a number of upgrades, Â its suspension was updated with gas-filled shock absorbers and a Bosch ABS system was fitted. The engine retained the same cubic capacity and fuel-injection system as the 512TR but it also received a number of internal upgrades that resulted in a rise in bhp from 422 to 440.
